t trying to understand the HRE a bit and how to play it. I am currently Austria, and am struggling with understanding why I would ever go down the HRE path instead of just forming Germany and keeping my mission true as Austria. And while I'd like to do a Palatinate run, it seems.... tough? given AE in the Empire? I am therefore officially rooting for a Franco-German strike on Russia, prompting the Soviets to strike back with their hitherto secret nukes. This will serve as a salutary lesson to all involved and leave everyone suitably chastened.-El Pip Great War: The American Front can the United States defeat Britain and its Confederate Lacey's? Or will the CSA defend its freedom against the Yankee Menace? I'm trying to understand the HRE a bit and how to play it. I am currently Austria, and am struggling with understanding why I would ever go down the HRE path instead of just forming Germany and keeping my mission true as Austria. And while I'd like to do a Palatinate run, it seems.... tough? given AE in the Empire? Advantage of empire is you have a vassal swarm, and it requires far less AE to achieve, as well as relatively easy for a medium skilled player One thing is that going down the HRE path is a lot of fun, as it is a very different style of playing. You do less direct conquest, but focus on a diplomacy (most importantly you always need to keep enough electors happy to get your provinces) which they have annexed another and force them to release it, you also want to deal with the provinces held by an outside power, especially if Burgundian Inheritance! also needs to stop the Shadow Kingdom by reigning in all the Italian princes. As soon the Reformation hits you need to deal with it, force-converting the princes back to catholic. One major challenge is how to get attack all princes you want to target, that means playing around with alliances (attacking allies of the one you actually target or even allies of allies (make them co-belligerent), get the casus-belli when demand imperial land is refused and so on. You might also want to take some provinces around the empire so you can fabricate claim (or use deus vult with religious ideas) later; you can core throughout the empire. If you manage to go down the reform path you ultimately can vassalize all HRE princes, which makes you practically unstoppable. Even until then being the HRE gives you a number boost (especially to manpower + fl, but also diplomatic advantages, increasing with more reforms). To accomplish all of this you best start with Austria, for other nations there is the additional challenge to first become emperor, they are also smaller, weaker and poorer. For details I would have a look at the wiki: I guess there are also guides here on the forum and definitely on YouTube. Last edited: Jan 23, 2021 Reactions: Most guides are about old patches or exploit early patches of Emperor. Personally I found forming HRE and played Austria that way the most boring and frustrating gameplay. Like random daughter can ruin your compain then you through two of them in well already. Well if you got to 25 IA in time you can pass the Pragmatic Sanction, but it might be an issue if IA is low and your ruler Old when you get to the daughter. Well if you get to 25 IA in time you can pass the Pragmatic Sanction, but it might be an issue if IA is low and your ruler old when you get to the daughter. You could lose a bit of IA, but it might be helpful to get the casus belli. The more aggressive HRE nations usually gobble up more princes than the rather long cooldown for accepting unlawful territory allows, so you want to cut them down by war every now and then, as you can release all princes they have gobbled up. But yeah in many case no need for the war as unlawful territory is enough. Demand Unlawful territory when it releases a prince (don't waste it otherwise), if you see they are going to refuse you lose a bit of IA, but it might be helpful to get the casus belli. But yeah in many case no need for the war as unlawful territory is enough. Enforce peace on someone annexing too many gets you around losing 1IA Also, should use Demand unlawful territory efficiently, since it gives you -100 relations with receiving country. For example, if country took a bite out of Brandenburg but left it alive, and the province has no other cores rather than Brandenburg, don't bother. However, if OPM is annexed, try to return it back to live, the more princes you have, the better. Additionally, if you are in war with prince, always look if you can release some more tags with their capitals in the Empire. Achievements: Random daughter should read as "use task manager" The only frustrating part is savelcumming until a) you get burgundy and b) centres of reformation spawn in OPMs For some people savescumming null fun anymore. I used it in my early games, but later I found what it actually interesting to fight...can get full experience". Lots of achievements actualy not so hard if you savescummung every event. Yeah but early game there's some stuff which really is savcesmunttll female heir for Austria, stab loss event with castle when you're rushing adn tech 5 to get tenerife in, Shah rukh dying during war with ajam In my many Austria runs I never really had an issue with female heir, although I can see if it happens at a very unfortunate time it's an issue (after a reform, very low IA gain from reformation and ruler odd). And of course it's a delay for the next reform, but I guess I like the roleplay Historically the decision is illogical btw, as the HRE could never be female and the Pragmatic Sanction only referred to the Austrian lands and was not primarily about female inheritance but about avoiding parition among multiple heirs), it fulfills a good gamepleay purpose though, so that af emale heir is not the end of your HRE run. Yeah but early game there's some stuff which really is savcesmunttll female heir for Austria, stab loss event with castle when you're rushing adn tech 5 to get tenerife in, Shah rukh dying during war with ajam I agree with it in general, but personally I need strict rules for myself. But I feel Austria have too many savcesmunt moment in diplo game. It so much easy to simply get Bohemia, Hungry and Milan as PU, vassalise Bys, run Otto and start eating your way to sweet indian trade. Also my fist gun game as Timmy was exahst with such conditions.
